Dear Mr. Van Nessel,

Just to thank you once again for "Early Golf" which I shall read with much interest. It is a subject about which I too have read quite widely - eg. in Robert Browning's "A History of Golf". He, however, only takes us back to 1421.!

Do you remember the American song about "the crazy Scot, who invented this plot to rob the world of laughter". For "Scot" read "Dallander"!!

Yours sincerely,

Dandy Miskin

Dear Steven,

Very many thanks for your letter, and further interesting article which I'm very glad to add to "Early Golf".

The collection of early clubheads which you describe must be of immense interest to golf historians like yourself.

I first became a golf club member (junior) in 1919 - so I well remember making a tee from a pinch of damp sand. Indeed, I became quite skilled in the art! Wooden (or plastic) tees came into general use in Britain in the early twenties.

I continue to seek Dobson's "The Glorious World of Golf". Shall have it soon now.

It would be delightful to meet you at Christmas.

All good wishes,

Yours sincerely,

Sandy Meikle
